

Living Fossils Exhibition At Leeds Metropolitan University

A "Living Fossils" exhibition was held at Leeds Metropolitan University, one of Great Britain's most prestigious centers of learning, on 20-27 February 2008. The exhibition lasted for a week and included fossils which had survived for millions of years completely unchanged right down to the present day and which displayed exactly the same characteristics as their present-day counterparts. It attracted considerable interest from students, and also contained posters which summarized how fossils totally demolished the theory of evolution's claims of life forms being gradually descended from one another.
